DECRETO RETTORALE

Art. 2

The activities covered by the research grant referred to in this call for competition and the admission requirements are indicated and described in Annex A. Failure to meet the admission requirements at the time of applying shall result in the exclusion of the candidate from the selection process.

Possession of a PhD qualification or equivalent qualification obtained abroad or, for the sectors concerned only, of a medical specialisation qualification accompanied by an adequate scientific production, constitutes a preferential requirement for the awarding of the grant envisaged for this selection, if it has not been mentioned as an admission requirement.

The Selection Board shall assess, for the sole purpose of admission to the competition, the suitability of any qualification obtained abroad, without prejudice to the assessment of the medical specialisation qualification to which Article 38, paragraph 3.1 of Legislative Decree 165/2001, as amended, and the relevant Community regulations apply.

The Board assesses the qualification obtained abroad based on the relevant documentation enclosed with the application to take part in the selection and may exclude the candidate if the submitted documentation does not provide sufficient elements for the assessment.

Candidates are therefore invited to enclose all documentation in their possession relating to their qualifications in order to provide the Board with sufficient elements to assess their position.

Candidates are admitted to the selection process subject to a reservation and their exclusion, for failure to meet the requirements, may be ordered at any time by reasoned decision.

Art. 3

Testo in italiano:

Le foreste ricoprono il 37% dell'Italia, fornendo una moltitudine di benefici e servizi ecosistemici per il paese. Tuttavia, il cambiamento climatico (CC) in corso può comportare profondi impatti sulla struttura e sulla funzione delle foreste. Sono già evidenti crescenti tassi di declino forestale e mortalità degli alberi nel bacino del Mediterraneo e diverse specie di quercia mostrano fenomeni diffusi di declino e mortalità in Italia. Pertanto, per prevedere la sorte delle foreste mediterranee e per guidare le future strategie di conservazione, è necessaria una comprensione approfondita dei principali meccanismi genetici coinvolti nella risposta alle variabili ambientali influenzate dal CC. Ad oggi, gli studi che hanno cercato di chiarire le basi genetiche dei fenotipi complessi nelle piante si sono concentrati principalmente sull'identificazione dell'associazione genetica tra un dato fenotipo e i polimorfismi a singolo nucleotide (SNP). Tuttavia, recenti studi hanno mostrato che, oltre agli SNP, altri tipi di variazione genomica, ad esempio le varianti strutturali (SV), svolgono un ruolo importante nell'evoluzione del genoma delle piante. Pertanto, per catturare la diversità genetica all'interno di una specie è diventato evidente che il genoma di un singolo individuo non è sufficiente a rappresentare la diversità genica all'interno di un'intera specie, spingendo la ricerca ad estendere il concetto di pan-genoma alle piante. Il pan-genoma di una determinata specie è composto da un genoma core (CG), comune a tutti gli individui della specie, e da un genoma dispensabile (DG), la parte del genoma presente solo in alcuni individui, ma non in tutti. PanBiOak studierà la distribuzione geografica della diversità genomica sensu lato, dai polimorfismi a singolo nucleotide alla variazione strutturale in tre specie di quercia diffuse, economicamente importanti e filogeneticamente vicine (Quercus petraea, Q. pubescens e Q. robur). PanBiOak svelerà per la prima volta il contributo delle SV all'adattamento locale e all'evoluzione in una specie arborea forestale su scala biogeografica con l'obiettivo di individuare possibili hotspot di variazione che si presume sottostiano al fenotipo selezionato durante l'evoluzione della specie e di produrre un elenco di marcatori biogeografici specifici di adattamento locale. Questo progetto offre un'opportunità unica per contribuire alla ricerca all'avanguardia in genomica e biologia evolutiva. Utilizzando strumenti bioinformatici e metodologie di laboratorio, il candidato condurrà approfondite analisi genomiche sui campioni sequenziati. Il progetto prevedrà: a) Ricostruzione di genomi di riferimento di alta qualità per ciascuna specie di quercia utilizzando la tecnologia di sequenziamento PacBio HiFi, che permette l'assemblaggio di sequenze genomiche contigue e altamente accurate. b) Analisi del trascrittoma per eseguire la predizione e l'annotazione dei geni de novo dei tre genomi. c) Estrazione di DNA ad alto peso molecolare (HMW) da diversi campioni di quercia campionati in tutta Italia. Il DNA HMW è cruciale per la produzione di sequenze lunghe essenziali per la ricostruzione del pan-genoma di ciascuna specie di quercia. Le reads lunghe semplificano la caratterizzazione delle frazioni core e dispensabile del pan-genoma, vantando un'eccezionale efficienza di allineamento anche nelle regioni complesse tradizionalmente difficili se non impossibili per il sequenziamento con sequenze corte. Combinando le più recenti tecnologie di sequenziamento, approcci bioinformatici innovativi e collaborazione interdisciplinare, miriamo ad avanzare nella comprensione della storia evolutiva delle specie di quercia e a guidare le strategie di conservazione per questi organismi ecologicamente significativi. Preferibilmente, il candidato dovrebbe avere esperienza nel campo della genomica, familiarità con l'ambiente Linux e competenze nell'ambito delle attività di laboratorio.

DECRETO RETTORALE

Text in English:

Forests cover 37% of Italy providing a multitude of benefits and ecosystem services for the country. However, the ongoing climate change (CC) is expected to determine profound impacts on forest structure and function. In fact, increasing rates of forest decline and tree mortality have already been reported in the Mediterranean basin and several oak species display widespread decline and mortality phenomena in Italy. Thus, to predict the fate of the Mediterranean forests and to inform future conservation strategies, we need an in-depth understanding of the key genetic mechanisms involved in the response to environmental variables affected by CC. As of today, studies aimed at elucidating the genetic bases of complex phenotypes in plants focused mostly on identifying genetic association between a given phenotype and single-nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs). However, recent studies showed that, in addition to SNPs, other types of genomic variation, named structural variation (SV), play an important role in plant genome evolution. Thus, to capture the genetic diversity within a species, it became evident that the genome of a single individual is insufficient to represent the gene diversity within a whole species prompting research to extend the pan-genome concept to plants. The pan-genome of a given species is composed of a core genome (CG), common to all individuals of the species, and of a dispensable genome (DG), the portion of the genome which is present only in some individuals. PanBiOak will study the geographical distribution of genomic diversity sensu lato, from single nucleotide to structural variation in three widespread, economically important, and phylogenetically close oak species (Quercus petraea, Q. pubescens and Q. robur). PanBiOak will unravel for the first time the contribution of SV to local adaptation and evolution in a forest tree species at a biogeographical scale with the aim to search for possible hotspots of variation which are assumed to underlie the phenotype selected during species evolution and to produce a list of biogeographic-specific markers of local adaptation. This project offers a unique opportunity to contribute to cutting-edge research in genomics and evolutionary biology. Using state-of-the-art bioinformatics tools and laboratory methodologies, the successful candidate will conduct in-depth genomic analyses on the sequenced samples. The project will involve: a) Reconstruction of high-quality reference genomes using PacBio HiFi sequencing technology for each oak species, which enables the assembly of contiguous and highly accurate genome sequences. b) Transcriptome analyses to perform de-novo gene prediction and annotation of the three oak species genomes. c) High Molecular Weight (HMW) DNA extraction from different oak samples sampled across Italy. HMW DNA is crucial for long-read sequencing that will be essential for reconstructing the pan-genome of each oak species. Long reads simplify the characterization of both the core and dispensable fractions of the pan-genome, boasting exceptional alignment efficiency even in intricate regions traditionally challenging for short-read sequencing. By combining the latest sequencing technologies, innovative bioinformatics approaches, and interdisciplinary collaboration, we aim to advance our understanding of oak species' evolutionary history and inform conservation strategies for these
