Testo in italiano:
Una delle maggiori sfide per lo sviluppo agricolo consiste nella formulazione di strategie per coniugare la fornitura di servizi ecosistemici con una adeguata vitalità socio-economica delle aziende. Gli agroecosistemi sono spesso considerati incompatibili con la conservazione e la protezione delle risorse naturali, tuttavia il riconoscimento del ruolo dei sistemi agricoli a bassa intensità per la conservazione della biodiversità ha portato alla formulazione del concetto aree agricole di alto valore naturale (AVN), vale a dire di porzioni di paesaggio coltivato le cui caratteristiche consentono di supportare alti livelli di biodiversità, o specie e habitat di interesse conservazionistico, e i relativi servizi ecosistemici. A livello europeo sono state identificati tre tipi di aree agricole AVN sulla base della presenza di habitat seminaturali, della diversità paesaggistica dei sistemi agricoli a bassa intensità e della presenza di specie di interesse conservazionistico. L’obiettivo dell’attività di ricerca è mappare e caratterizzare le aree agricole HVNF della regione Friuli Venezia Giulia, prioritariamente nelle zone di pianura e di collina.

Le attività previste sono:
- indagine bibliografica per la definizione del quadro di riferimento nazionale e internazionale e la verifica dei dati disponibili per la caratterizzazione delle componenti base dei sistemi agricoli (ad esempio copertura del suolo, intensità di gestione, ecc.);
- sviluppo di un approccio di mappatura e caratterizzazione per HNVF integrando tecnologie di telerilevamento e GIS. Il pattern delle coperture del suolo e degli habitat naturali, l'intensità dei sistemi agricoli, le caratteristiche della biodiversità saranno misurate mediante indici quantitativi;
- analisi delle relazioni tra le aree agricole HVNF e le politiche di gestione del territorio come lo sviluppo rurale e la tutela ambientale.

Sono richieste buone competenze in tecnologie GIS e analisi geospaziale, dei metodi di integrazione dati provenienti da fonti diverse, tecniche di analisi statistica e competenze di base per l’analisi di immagini multispettrali. Il ricercatore, oltre a supportare il team nelle attività di ricerca, collaborerà allo sviluppo delle analisi, al rilevamento dei dati sul campo, alla definizione delle procedure e all'elaborazione dei dati spaziali per la produzione delle mappe previste, alla realizzazione di relazioni e articoli scientifici.

Text in English:

One of the main challenges for agricultural development is to formulate strategies to maintain both the provision of ecosystem services and socio-economic viability of farms. Agroecosystems are often considered in conflict with the conservation and protection of biodiversity and natural habitat. However, the role of low-intensity farming systems in biodiversity conservation has led to the formulation of the high nature value farmland areas (HNVF) concept. HNVF are cultivated landscape whose characteristics enable them to support high levels of biodiversity, or species and habitats of conservation interest, and related ecosystem services. At the European level, three types of agricultural HNVF areas have been identified respectively on the base of the presence of semi-natural habitats, the landscape diversity of low-intensity farming systems, and the presence of species of conservation interest.

The objective of the research activity is to map and characterize agricultural AVN areas in the Friuli Venezia Giulia region, with priority given to lowland and hill areas.

The research steps are:
- literature survey to define the national and international framework on the issue, the analysis of available data for the characterization of the basic components of agricultural systems (e.g., land cover, management intensity, etc.);
- development of the mapping approach for HNVF by integrating remote sensing and GIS technologies. Land cover and natural habitat patterns, intensity of agricultural systems, and biodiversity will be measured by quantitative indices;
- the analysis of the relationships between HVNF areas and land management policies such as rural development and environmental protection.

Good skills in GIS technologies and geospatial analysis, in integration of data from different sources, statistical analysis techniques and basic skills in multispectral image analysis are required. The researcher, will support the team in research activities, collaborate in the development of analysis, field data survey, definition of procedures and spatial data processing for the production of the planned maps, the implementation of reports and scientific articles.
