Testo in italiano:

Il melo (Malus domestica) è un'importante coltura frutticola generalmente coltivata in condizioni climatiche umide, quelle prevalenti nel Nord Italia. Le mele sono frutti economicamente importanti, molto apprezzati dai consumatori, adatti a lunghi periodi di conservazione grazie alle caratteristiche dei frutti e alle tecnologie di conservazione. L'Italia è il secondo produttore di mele dell'UE, anche se negli ultimi anni si è verificato un costante calo della produzione nazionale dovuto principalmente ai cambiamenti climatici e all'emergenza di nuove malattie e parassiti. Infatti, il cambiamento climatico può alterare i microrganismi, l'ambiente e le piante, in grado così di favorire l'emergenza di nuove specie fungine, con conseguenze per la salute, la biodiversità e la sicurezza alimentare. Tra le sfide emergenti più rilevanti, la fase di stoccaggio resta una delle più complesse da gestire poiché lunghi periodi di stoccaggio possono favorire l'insorgere di malattie biotiche e abiotiche che causano notevoli perdite economiche.

Il progetto mira a migliorare le conoscenze scientifiche sulla gestione delle malattie del melo in campo e in magazzino. Saranno condotte analisi epidemiologiche e pianificate strategie sostenibili di gestione post-raccolta per il contenimento dell'emergere di patogeni fungini, causa del marciume lenticellare delle mele (Neofabraea spp.). Per raggiungere questo obiettivo, la sperimentazione si concentrerà su due diversi contesti, ma strettamente collegati tra loro: il campo e la conservazione.

In campo verranno applicati mensilmente trattamenti a base di agenti di biocontrollo (ceppi di Aureobasidium pullulans) ed estratti vegetali, a partire da tre mesi prima della raccolta in meleti biologici selezionati. I trattamenti saranno eseguiti singolarmente e in maniera congiunta al fine di prevenire le infezioni post-raccolta. In conservazione, le mele raccolte dallo stesso frutteto saranno inoculate e non con sospensioni conidiche di Neofabraea vagabunda e successivamente trattate con antagonisti biologici ( $10^8$  cellule mL<sup>-1</sup>), estratti vegetali e trattamenti termici (acqua calda) (45°C × 5/3 min). Tutte le mele saranno conservate per 4 mesi a 0°C alle comuni condizioni di refrigerazione. Tutti

i trattamenti saranno confrontati con frutti non trattati (sia in campo che prima della fase di post-raccolta). Sulle mele raccolte, i trattamenti previsti avranno funzione curativa. Per quanto concerne lo studio dell'epidemiologia di N. vagabunda, saranno previste analisi genomiche e di espressione genica per meglio approfondire l'interazione ospite – patogeno, nonché gli aspetti fisiologici del fungo, strettamente legati al fattore della latenza che lo contraddistingue.

Dunque, i risultati della ricerca contribuiranno a migliorare le strategie di gestione alternativa alle infezioni fungine pre- e post-raccolta causate da N. vagabunda sulle mele, basandosi anche sui risultati ottenuti in laboratorio. Inoltre, verrà approfondita la conoscenza sull'integrazione di diversi trattamenti sostenibili come antagonisti biologici, estratti vegetali e trattamenti termici che potrebbero infatti beneficiare dei loro effetti additivi o sinergici e/o migliorare a loro volta l'efficacia di ciascun metodo adottato.

Text in English:

Apple (Malus domestica) is an important fruit crop generally cultivated in humid climatic conditions, those prevalent in the North of Italy. Apples are economically important fruits, highly appreciated by consumers, suitable for long storage periods thanks to fruit characteristics and storage technologies. Italy is the EU's second largest producer of apples, although in last years, a constant decrease occurred in national production mainly due to climate change and the emergence of new diseases and pests.

In fact, climate change can alter microorganisms, the environment, and plants, thus favouring the emergence of new fungal species, with consequences for human health, biodiversity, and food safety. Among the most relevant emerging challenges, the storage phase remains one of the most complex to manage since long periods of storage can favour the onset of biotic and abiotic diseases causing significant economic losses.

The project aims to improve the scientific knowledge of apple diseases management in the field and during the storage. Epidemiological analyses will be conducted and sustainable post-harvest management strategies against latent fungal pathogens will be planned, in particular against bull's eye rot causal agent (Neofabraea spp.). To achieve this goal, the experiments will be conducted on two different but closely related contexts: the field and the storage.

In the field, treatments with biocontrol agents (Aureobasidium pullulans strains) and plant extracts will be applied monthly, starting from three months before the harvest in previous selected organic apple orchards. The treatments will be conducted separately and together to prevent post-harvest infections. During the post-harvest phase, harvested apples will be artificially inoculated with Neofabraea vagabunda conidial suspension and subsequently treated with the same microbial antagonists ( $10^8$  cells mL<sup>-1</sup>) and plant extracts, and also with hot water (HW) (45°C × 5/3 min). All the apples will be stored for 4 months at 0°C by normal refrigeration conditions. All treatments will be compared with untreated fruits belonging to the same apple orchard. On harvested apples, the treatments will be used as a curative strategy. As far as the study on the epidemiology of N. vagabunda is concerned, genomic and gene expression analyses will be planned to better investigate the host-pathogen interaction and to investigate the physiological aspects of the fungus, closely linked to the its latent behaviour.

Therefore, the research results, based also on laboratory experiments, will contribute to improve alternative management strategies to apply against pre- and post-harvest fungal infections, and mainly against bull's eye rot symptoms (causal agent N. vagabunda). Furthermore, the knowledge on the integration of different sustainable treatments such as biological antagonists, plant extracts, and heat treatments could benefit from their additive or synergistic effect and/or improve the effectiveness of each adopted method.
