Testo in italiano:

A livello europeo, la diversificazione delle colture è stata identificata come una delle principali strategie per aumentare i servizi agroecosistemici (AES) forniti dalle attività agricole e la resilienza delle aziende agricole per affrontare i cambiamenti climatici o le fluttuazioni dei prezzi delle colture. Tra le pratiche di diversificazione delle colture, la consociazione mostra diversi vantaggi, soprattutto se applicata a sistemi colturali basati su soia (SBCS) che sono generalmente scarsamente diversificati. In Italia la soia viene coltivata principalmente in Veneto e Friuli Venezia Giulia e rappresenta in queste regioni i 2/3 della superficie nazionale a soia. Considerata la strategia dell’UE volta ad aumentare la produzione di proteine vegetali, ma anche considerando le problematiche di controllo di insetti (ad esempio Tetranychus urticae e Halymorpha halys) e di infestanti (sviluppo di infestanti resistenti) in questi SBCS, il progetto mira a testare e sviluppare ulteriori sistemi basati su soia e sostenibili in grado di supportare diversi AES e migliorare la biodiversità in campo. Si tratta di sistemi innovativi basati sulla coltivazione “a strisce” della soia con grano saraceno che, per quanto di nostra conoscenza, non è stato ancora studiato e applicato in Italia. Ipotizziamo che l’identificazione e l’adozione di SBCS innovativi richieda un approccio integrato, che combini un processo top-down basato su nuove conoscenze scientifiche e metodi per valutare l’AES e un processo bottom-up basato sul feedback dati dagli agricoltori basato sulla loro esperienza quotidiana in campo. Per questi motivi, le attività del progetto verranno svolte in parallelo sia a livello di appezzamento che di azienda agricola. A livello di appezzamento, entrambi i partner del progetto sperimenteranno 15 trattamenti derivanti dalla combinazione di due fattori: il sistema colturale (coltura pura o consociata) e la gestione dei parassiti. A livello di azienda agricola, almeno 4 agricoltori selezioneranno uno dei sistemi consociati innovativi in base alle caratteristiche della loro azienda agricola e lo coltiveranno per due annate fornendo...
feedback e raccomandazioni ai ricercatori. Tutti i dati raccolti dagli esperimenti sia in appezzamento che in azienda verranno utilizzati per un'analisi multicriterio volta a identificare le migliori configurazioni di consociazione in diverse condizioni pedoclimatiche e di sistemi colturali.

Text in English:
At EU level, crop diversification has been identified as one of the main strategies to increase the agro-ecosystem services (AES) provided by farming and the resilience of farms to face climate change or price fluctuations. Among the practices of crop diversification, intercropping shows main features and advantages, especially when applied to soybean-based cropping systems (SBCS) which are generally poorly diversified. In Italy, soybean is mainly cropped in Veneto and Friuli Venezia Giulia accounting 2/3 of the national surface. Given the EU strategy of increasing plant protein production, but also considering the issue at stake in terms of pest control (e.g., Tetranicus urticae and Halymorpha halys) and weed management (development of resistant weeds) in these SBCS the project aims to test and develop more sustainable SBCS able to support different AES and enhancing biodiversity. These innovative systems are based on the strip cropping of soybean with buckwheat that at the best of our knowledge have not yet been investigated in Italy. We hypothesize that the identification and adoption of innovative SBCS requires an integrated approach, combining a top-down process based on new scientific knowledge and methods to assess AES and a bottom-up process based on farmers feedback based on their daily field experience. For those reasons, project activities will be run in parallel at both plot and farm level. At the plot level, both the partners of the project will test 15 treatments deriving from the combination of two factors: the cropping system (sole crop or intercropped) and the pest management. At the farm level, at least 4 farmers will select one of the innovative SBCS according to their farm features and will crop it for two cropping seasons giving feedback and recommendations to researchers. All the data collected from both plot and farm experiments will be used for a multicriteria analysis aiming at identifying the best intercropping configurations in different pedo-climatic and cropping systems conditions.
