Testo in italiano:
Il progetto di ricerca si inquadra nell’ambito di un progetto PRIN per il monitoraggio di situazioni di rischio per i lavoratori impegnati nella guida o in attività critiche in ambienti confinati.

Nell’ambito della sicurezza sui luoghi di lavoro, il progetto propone la realizzazione di un sistema di monitoraggio distribuito pensato per l’esercizio in grandi cantieri, basato sulla tecnologia 5G. Le tecnologie LPWAN (Low Power, Wide Area Network) di nuova generazione supportate dai protocolli 5G hanno un impatto significativo sulla progettazione e sulle prestazioni delle applicazioni di rilevamento distribuite e/o mobili. Ciò richiede un’analisi approfondita e l’ottimizzazione di risorse, protocolli e configurazioni, nella rete e nei nodi di rilevamento, per perseguire l’espansione degli ambiti operativi per le applicazioni mobili multisensore e, in ultima analisi, per migliorare la sicurezza sul lavoro.

Il sistema proposto sarà costituito da un'architettura di rete a due livelli. Il primo livello comprende reti mobili di sensori indossabili wireless (WBSN) che incorporano specifici e diversi sensori ambientali (particolarmente dedicati al rilevamento di gas tossici o scarsa qualità dell'aria), dispositivi intelligenti di protezione individuale (DPI) e dispositivi che monitorano le condizioni dei singoli lavoratori, come ad esempio esposizione a vibrazioni, condizioni biofisiche e dati inerziali. Tali informazioni vengono gestite ed elaborate in parte localmente, attraverso dispositivi appartenenti a una Body Area Network e in parte da remoto previa trasmissione tramite connessione 5G, per fondere i dati sullo stato dei lavoratori con informazioni relative al monitoraggio ambientale, allo scopo di estrarre parametri sintetici che descrivono la salute e le condizioni dei lavoratori.
In particular, the research activity envisaged for the grant concerns the design of a wireless sensor system capable of acquiring electrodermal activity (EDA) and electrocardiogram (ECG) signals, as well as monitoring heart rate and its coefficient of variability (HRV). The activity will consist of the analysis of biosignals to recognize situations of stress and mental involvement by exploiting characteristics extracted from both EDA Skin Potential Response (SPR) and ECG signals. The raw signals will also be used as input for automatic classifiers based on convolutional neural networks (CNN) and long-short-term memory (LSTM) networks.

The project will concern the setup of an automotive simulation environment, based on an inertial platform present in our laboratories. Having as its objective the automatic recognition of stressful and potentially dangerous situations for drivers, the development of software and graphic interfaces for the simulation of heavy vehicles will be required, and the organization of a measurement campaign for the acquisition of signals. Appropriate signal processing solutions will need to be defined for initial processing of the data, which will then be interpreted automatically by classifiers based on neural networks.

Another specific activity will concern the design of dedicated sensors for the acquisition of signals (e.g., PPG) and the development of procedures for the automatic identification of critical situations concerning workers in confined environments.
