Testo in italiano:
Le tecniche dell’intelligenza artificiale si pongono alla base di uno spettro molto ampio di opportunità applicative nella ricerca medica. Esse costituiscono una cerniera culturale di rilevante interesse tra discipline dure e ambiti di ricerca scientifica che coinvolgono le realtà sanitarie. In riferimento alla imponente dimensione epidemiologica di alcune patologie di priorità pubblica in ambito sanitario, nonché alla esigenza di poter fruire di strumenti efficaci per anticipare, comprendere ed eventualmente gestire le pandemie, va constata l’esigenza di analizzare, estrapolare e mettere in relazione una gigantesca mole di dati estremamente eterogenei che vengono raccolti su popolazioni di dimensioni enormi.

In ambito sanitario possono trovare ragionevole applicazione le tecnologie più sofisticate di analisi dei “big data” assieme alle tecniche di intelligenza artificiale con l’applicazione dei “machine learning tools”, con ciò stabilendo dei robusti elementi di collegamento scientifico in aggiunta a un’importante opportunità interattiva tra il Dipartimento di Area Medica (DAME) e il Dipartimento di Scienze Matematiche, Informatiche e Fisiche (DMIF).

Gli obiettivi previsti e i risultati attesi del programma di ricerca sono l’utilizzo di un approccio con tecniche di intelligenza artificiale per:

▪ creare modelli per la predizione del rischio di sviluppo di complicanze cardio-metaboliche post-COVID-19, utilizzando campioni di siero e plasma già presenti nella banca dei campioni COVID-19, raccolti da inizio pandemia e raccogliendo informazioni aggiornate di outcome cardio-metabolico dei pazienti inclusi nella biobanca;
▪ creare modelli per la predizione del rischio di sviluppo di sindrome metabolica in una coorte di soggetti a rischio utilizzando dati clinico anamnestici, strumentali e clinico laboratoristici;
▪ integrare i dati clinici, istologici, radiologici, genetici dei pazienti sottoposti a biopsia prostatica presso la SOC di Urologia dell’Azienda Sanitaria universitaria Friuli Centrale dal 2010 al 2020, con diagnosi di carcinoma prostatico a rischio basso, intermedio e alto sec. EAU con l’obiettivo di ridefinire le categorie di rischio; progettare una pipeline automatica basata sull'estrazione di caratteristiche incentrate sul paziente (PCF) da scansioni di tomografia computerizzata (TC); combinare PCF e caratteristiche del tumore (TCF) come profilo genetico ed epigenetico del ctDNA per prevedere meglio la tollerabilità e la risposta a ET+CDK4/6i per la personalizzazione del trattamento.

Text in English:
Artificial intelligence techniques underlie a very broad spectrum of application opportunities in medical research. They constitute a cultural hinge of relevant interest between hard disciplines and areas of research science involving health care realities. With reference to the impressive epidemiological dimension of some pathologies of priority importance in health care, as well as the need to be able to benefit from effective tools to anticipate, understand and possibly manage pandemics, the need to analyze, extrapolate and relate a gigantic amount of extremely heterogeneous data being collected on populations of enormous sizes.
In health care, more sophisticated “big data” analysis technologies along with artificial intelligence techniques with the application of “machine learning tools,” thereby establishing robust scientific linkages in addition to an important interactive opportunity between the Department of Medical Area (DAME) and the Department of Mathematical, Informatics and Physical Sciences (DMIF).
The intended goals and expected results of the research program are to use an artificial intelligence techniques approach to:

- create models for predicting the risk of developing cardio-metabolic complications post-COVID-19, using serum and plasma samples already in the COVID-19 specimen bank, collected from the beginning of the pandemic and collecting up-to-date cardio-metabolic outcome information of patients included in the biobank;
- create models for predicting the risk of developing metabolic syndrome in a cohort of at-risk individuals using clinical history, instrumental and clinical laboratory data;
- integrate clinical, histologic, radiologic, and genetic data from patients undergoing prostate biopsy at the SOC of Urology of the Friuli Centrale University Health Authority from 2010 to 2020, diagnosed with low, intermediate, and high risk prostate cancer according to EAU with the goal of redefining risk categories;
- design an automated pipeline focused on extracting patient-centered features (PCFs) from computed tomography (CT) scans; combine PCFs and tumor characteristics (TCFs) as genetic and epigenetic ctDNA profiling to better predict tolerability and response to ET+CDK4/6i for treatment personalization.
