Testo in italiano:

L’approccio teranostico è la combinazione di terapia e diagnosi e può essere visto come un possibile strumento che aiuta la trasformazione della medicina convenzionale e non specifica verso la medicina contemporanea di precisione o personalizzata. Il bioimaging e il biosensing sono aree emergenti per acquisire conoscenze approfondite sulle funzioni cellulari e fornire un’ampia gamma di parametri diagnostici per diagnosi accurate e trattamento delle malattie. I complessi metallici (ed in particolare di terre rare) possono essere utilizzati per l’imaging di cellule tumorali mediante microscopia a fluorescenza per studiare la localizzazione cellulare dei complessi metallici oltre a danneggiare le cellule tumorali mediante foto-irradiazione. Lo scopo del progetto, sviluppato in collaborazione con gruppi di ricerca sperimentali, è quello di condurre uno studio di base per caratterizzare le proprietà e la reattività di nuovi complessi metallici contenenti derivati della molecola naturale curcumina mediante metodi computazionali. I composti contenenti curcumina sono promettenti come potenziali agenti terapeutici per il cancro attivi nella terapia fotodinamica (PDT). I complessi metallici verranno testati come sonde fluorescenti e successivamente nella generazione di specie reattive dell’ossigeno per attivare la morte delle cellule tumorali. Inoltre, si valuterà se la fotoattivazione di complessi metallici inerti possa indurre la scissione dei legami metallo-legante e trasformarli in farmaci attivi.

È richiesta una laurea magistrale o (preferibilmente) un dottorato di ricerca in Chimica o in una disciplina affine con un background in chimica computazionale, nonché esperienza nella modellazione quantomeccanica di molecole organiche e/o complessi metallici. È anche preferibile una precedente esperienza in studi computazionali di stati elettronici eccitati e/o composti di terre rare. L’esperienza pregressa dovrebbe essere documentabile (articoli, presentazioni…).
È richiesta la conoscenza pratica di diverse applicazioni di meccanica quantistica (Gaussian, ORCA ecc.) e dell'ambiente Linux che sono necessari per condurre questo progetto. La conoscenza di altre tecniche computazionali (dinamica molecolare classica ed ab initio, QM/MM..) e dei relativi codici, nonché di scripting (bash, python..) sarà considerata positivamente. L’assegnista dovrà essere capace di lavorare sia in modo indipendente che in collaborazione con i collaboratori sperimentali. L’assegnista dovrà inoltre sviluppare una solida conoscenza della letteratura sui più recenti progressi della ricerca relativa al progetto, scrivere articoli e tenere presentazioni. Sono quindi essenziali buone capacità comunicative e un’ottima conoscenza della lingua inglese.

Text in English:
The theragnostic approach is the combination of therapy and diagnosis and can be viewed as a possible tool helping the transformation of conventional, non-specific medicine towards contemporary precision or personalized medicine. Biomaging and biosensing are emerging areas to gain in-depth insights into cellular functions and provide a wide range of diagnostic parameters in accurate diagnosis, as well as treatment of diseases. Metal-based optical probes can be utilized for imaging cancer cells by fluorescence microscopy to study the cellular localization of the metal complexes besides damaging the cancer cells on photo-irradiation.

The aim of the project, which is developed in collaboration with experimentalists, is to conduct fundamental research, by means of computational methods, to characterize the properties and reactivity of new metal complexes containing derivatives of the natural molecule curcumin. Curcumin-containing compounds are promising as potential theragnostic agents for cancer active in photo dynamic therapy (PDT). The metal complexes compounds will be tested as fluorescent probes and successively in the generation of reactive oxygen species to activate the death of cancer cells. Also, it will be evaluated if the photoactivation of inert metal complexes can induce the cleavage of metal-ligand bonds and transform them into active drugs.

A MSc. in Chemistry (PhD strongly preferred) or related field with a background in computational chemistry, as well as experience in quantum chemical modeling of organic molecules and/or metal complexes is essential. A previous experience in computational studies of electronically excited states and/or rare earth compounds of rare earths is highly desirable. This experience should be documented by published papers. Practical knowledge of well different quantum chemistry codes (Gaussian, ORCA etc.), and Linux environment necessary to conduct this project is necessary. Knowledge of other computational techniques (classical, ab initio molecular dynamics, QM/MM..) and related codes, as well as scripting (bash, python..) will be considered a plus.

Candidates are expected to have the ability to work both independently and in collaboration with experimental researchers. The postdoctoral researcher is expected to monitor the most recent research progress in the literature related to the project, draft papers and give presentations. Therefore, good communication skills and excellent knowledge of English are essential.
