Testo in italiano:

Gli approcci all'analisi dei SE prevedono diversi metodi che si dividono in socio-culturali, economici e biofisici. I metodi socio-culturali raccolgono informazioni sulle preferenze individuali espresse in unità non monetarie, ad esempio mediante la durata di utilizzo oppure secondo scale di valori qualitativi. I metodi economici, invece, quantificano i SE in unità monetarie, ad esempio tramite prezzi di mercato, costo di sostituzione o costo del danno evitato. I metodi biofisici, quantificano i SE in unità biofisiche, basandosi sull'analisi delle caratteristiche strutturali e funzionali degli ecosistemi o mediante modellizzazione della produzione di tali servizi (es. modelli idrologici). A differenza dei precedenti approcci, quello biofisico consente di valutare la potenzialità naturale dei SE prima che essi si trasformino in beni o valori. Questo da un lato presenta il vantaggio dell'indipendenza dalle oscillazioni di mercato, dall'altro rende la percezione del risultato meno immediato. D'altra parte la valutazione economica di numerosi SE presuppone la loro quantificazione in unità biofisiche. Si ritiene quindi che un approccio integrato tra i diversi approcci possa rappresentare una soluzione ottimale per il raggiungimento degli obiettivi del progetto.

La ricerca si propone perciò di definire un quadro organico rispetto alla disponibilità di dati a supporto di metodologie per la stima del valore economico dei servizi ecosistemici legati al territorio agricolo, e lo sviluppo di un approccio dedicato alla realtà regionale a partire dai servizi ecosistemici collegati alle analisi realizzate nell'ambito del progetto SICaNSE.

Le attività necessarie alla stima del valore economico dei servizi ecosistemici si intrecciano strettamente e seguono quelle finalizzate alla individuazione delle aree HNPF e all'analisi degli ordinamenti culturali e dei sistemi produttivi agricoli e possono essere in estrema sintesi ricondotte a:

- analisi bibliografica delle metodologie disponibili sviluppate a livello nazionale o internazionale compatibili con la realtà regionale e inquadramento della tematica relativa alla valutazione economica dei servizi ecosistemici;
- analisi dei risultati preliminari delle azioni di progetto finalizzate alla mappatura delle aree HN VF, all'analisi degli ordinamenti colturali e dei sistemi produttivi agricoli alla scala territoriale ai fini della definizione dei SE collegati;
- analisi della disponibilità di dati e individuazione di eventuali lacune da colmare considerando l'integrazione dell'approccio biofisico e di valutazione economica;
- definizione della metodologia per la stima del valore dei servizi ecosistemici associati alla realtà rurale friulana e sua applicazione ad una selezione di servizi ecosistemici emersi dalle azioni di progetto finalizzate dalla mappatura delle aree HN VF e all'analisi degli ordinamenti colturali;
- analisi della potenzialità dei servizi ecosistemici studiati come fattore da considerare nella definizione di misure di gestione dell'ambiente agricolo e/o della loro valutazione, anche in riferimento alla PAC.

Text in English:

Approaches to the analysis of ES involve various methods that are divided into socio-cultural, economic and biophysical. Socio-cultural methods collect information on individual preferences expressed in non-monetary units, e.g. through duration of use or according to qualitative value scales. Economic methods, on the other hand, quantify SEs in monetary units, e.g. through market prices, replacement cost or avoided damage cost. Biophysical methods quantify ES in biophysical units, based on the analysis of structural and functional characteristics of ecosystems or by modelling the production of such services (e.g. hydrological models). Unlike the previous approaches, the biophysical approach makes it possible to assess the natural potential of ES before they are transformed into goods or values. This on the one hand has the advantage of independence from market fluctuations, on the other hand it makes the perception of the result less immediate. On the other hand, the economic valuation of numerous SEs presupposes their quantification in biophysical units. It is therefore considered that an integrated approach between different approaches may be an optimal solution for achieving the project's objectives.

The research therefore proposes to define an organic framework with respect to the availability of data to support methodologies for estimating the economic value of ecosystem services linked to the agricultural territory, and the development of a dedicated approach to the regional reality starting from the ecosystem services linked to the analyses carried out within the SICaNSE project.

The activities necessary for the estimation of the economic value of ecosystem services are closely intertwined with and follow those aimed at the identification of HN VF areas and the analysis of farming systems and production systems, and can be summarised as follows:

- bibliographic analysis of available methodologies developed at national or international level that are compatible with the regional reality and framing of the topic of the economic evaluation of ecosystem services;
- analysis of the preliminary results of the project actions aimed at mapping the HN VF areas, analysing cropping systems and agricultural production systems at the territorial scale for the definition of related ES;
- analysis of data availability and identification of possible gaps to be filled considering the integration of biophysical and economic evaluation approaches;
- definition of the methodology for the estimation of the value of ecosystem services associated with the Friuli Venezia Giulia rural reality and its application to a selection of ecosystem services emerged from the project actions aimed at mapping the HN VF areas and analysing the farming systems;

- analysis of the potential of the ecosystem services studied as a factor to be considered in the definition of management measures for the agricultural environment and/or their evaluation, also with reference to the CAP.
